Canada shuffles key diplomatic, military duties

L Gen Lessard retires after 40 years in uniform

By Matthew Fisher, Postmedia News June 19, 2011

A major shuffle in Canada's military and diplomatic corps is in the pipes.

Retired VAdm Glenn Davidson, currently the country's envoy to Syria, will become Canada's next ambassador to Afghanistan later this year. Davidson's more than 35 years in the military should be useful in his new job as Canada moves from a combat mission in the south of Afghanistan to a training mission in the north.

At about the same time, air force LGen Charlie Bouchard, who is leading NATO's air campaign against Libya, is retiring as deputy commander of the Allied Joint Forces Command Naples.

Fellow Canadian MGen Marquis Hainse will take over some of Bouchard's duties. But it is not yet known if Hainse, who was NATO's deputy commander in southern Afghanistan four years ago, will also assume Bouchard's role leading the air war in Libya. That decision has yet to be made by NATO.

As well, army MGen Stu Beare, who now oversees NATO's vital police training mission in Afghanistan, will become the new boss of Canadian Forces Expeditionary Command. Beare, an artillery officer who has directed the dramatic growth in size and capability of the Afghan police for the past year, is to be promoted to Lieutenant General when he replaces LGen Marc Lessard, the current CEFCOM commander.

Lessard, a former commander for NATO in southern Afghanistan, is retiring after nearly 40 years in uniform.

CEFCOM is responsible for all Canadian troops overseas, including those fighting against the Taliban in Afghanistan and against Moammar Gadhafi's Libyan regime.

The government has not yet announced the three new appointments. They were confirmed to Postmedia News by multiple sources in Afghanistan and Canada.

Davidson replaces William Crosbie, who is returning after two years at his own request to a position at Ottawa's Department of Foreign Affairs.
