MSM

Montréal and Puvirnituk, Quebec

CG: 06 January 2018

GH: 06 December 2017

DOI: 2007 to 2017

“Physician Geneviève Auclair spearheaded a successful campaign to recruit health care professionals to the Inuulitsivik Health Centre in Nunavik, and to introduce local youth to potential careers as doctors, nurses and technicians. During her tenure as chief of medicine, the number of permanent staff has increased significantly as new physicians and support workers arrive and opt to stay longer, resulting in more stable health care for the region’s residents.”

Dr. Geneviève Auclair, MSM, MD

Dr. Auclair graduated in medicine in June 2007 and started her practice in Puvirnituk Nunavik. She was one of three permanent physicians covering a large area, usually by aircraft. She immediately set out to recruit more physicians and more health care specialists to the area. There are now over 35 permanent physicians in Nunavut. She is the Chief of Medicine at the Inuulitsivik Health Centre and oversees the scheduling of physicians along the shores of Hudson Bay in Puvirnituk, Inukjuak and Salluit.

To help herself for her administrative role, she began an Executive MBA program in 2017 at the Desautels Faculty of Management at McGill University and HEC Montréal. Her topic is Inuit women and leadership

"A champion for Indigenous arts, culture and sport, Olympian Waneek Horn-Miller has lent her leadership skills to various causes. She promotes active and healthy lifestyles among Indigenous youth, advocates on behalf of the families of missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls and promotes the preservation of traditional arts. She is a wonderful role model and continues to work with the Canadian Olympic Committee to build lasting relationships with Indigenous athletes."

Waneek Horn-Miller has overcome discrimination and trauma to emerge as one of North America's most inspiring activists and Olympians (gold medal in 1999 at the Pan Am Games in Water Polo and 5th in Waterpolo). From her iconic TIME cover to her key role in the National Inquiry into Missing and Murder Indigenous Women and Girls, she empowers communities to overcome adversity, and helps turn reconciliation-justice, healing, and dialogue-into a cornerstone of our national institutions. Her public life began in 1990 at age 14 during the Oka Crisis, when she protested the planned development of condos and a golf course on traditional Kanien'kehá:ka (Mohawk) lands and burial grounds near Montreal. After nearly 80 days of stand-off with the RCMP and armed forces, she was stabbed in the chest by a Canadian soldier wielding a bayonet. The image of her wounded, holding her young sister, was shared across national media-and further galvanized Canadians to better understand, and care about, Indigenous issues. This near-death experience marked a turning point in her life, and she went on to become the first Mohawk woman to compete in the Olympic games (water polo), co-captaining Team Canada in Sydney in 2000. She was appointed as the director of Community Engagement for the MMIW (Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women Inquiry) on 07 February 2017.

"Former NHL star Eric Lindros has been instrumental in bringing the issue of sports-related concussions to the forefront, speaking candidly about his own experience and advocating for better information for athletes and coaches. Through his generous financial support of the London Health Sciences Centre and his participation in public fora, he has advanced both awareness and treatment of head injuries and has paved the way for younger athletes to safeguard their health while enjoying sports."

There might not be another player more qualified to speak on the concussion issue in the NHL than Eric Lindros because (a) he had six from 1998 to 2000, then two more before his retirement and (b) because, in most cases, he was a living illustration of "what not to do." Unless putting your head down and trying to skate through Scott Stevens is actually a principle of player safety.
