WENDY ARLENE CLAY

Mr. Chancellor, we are honoured to have in our presence today a woman whose dedication, ability and pioneering spirit have lifted her to the height of her profession. Surgeon General Wendy Arlene Clay is a doctor, pilot and flight surgeon who has risen through the ranks of the Canadian Forces and has consistently demonstrated an exceptional level of commitment to medicine and to her country. Born in Fort St. John, Dr. Clay began her military career in the Navy ROTP Program at UBC, where she graduated with a medical degree in 1967. She completed an internship at Toronto General Hospital and was assigned to Canadian Forces Base Trenton, where she became the first woman to receive training as a flight surgeon. Her next posting was to CFB Moose Jaw, where in 1974 she was the first woman to earn pilot's wings in the Canadian Forces. Dr. Clay was posted to National Defence Headquarters in 1982, where she was Director of Preventive Medicine. In 1988, as command surgeon, she was the highest-ranking physician at Air Command Headquarters. A year later, she achieved the rank of brigadier-general and was made Commandant of the National Defence Medical Centre. In 1994, Dr. Clay was promoted to the rank of Major-General and the position of Surgeon General for the Canadian Forces. She is the first woman to achieve both of those positions. Mr. Chancellor, we are recognizing Dr. Clay not only for these achievements, but also for her commitment to her profession. In her 27 years with the Canadian Forces, Dr. Clay has served her country in medical, administrative, and leadership positions, including a six-month peacekeeping tour in the Middle East. She has completed further studies in advanced aviation medicine and earned a Master's Degree in Health Sciences from the University of Toronto. Dr. Clay's leadership in military medicine has made her an exceptional role model. In recognition of her achievements, she has received awards from the UBC Medical Division and the UBC Alumni Association. Mr. Chancellor, I would ask that you now confer the Degree Doctor of Science, honoris causa, upon WENDY ARLENE CLAY.

I had the pleasure of passing Wendy when she did her Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons specialty examinations in Community Medicine when I served as chair of the specialty examining board. One day I was in the lounge waiting for a service flight on the old Boeing 707s and I heard a couple of senior officers commenting on that female officer wearing pilot's wings. They were thinking about going over and telling her she shouldn't be wearing them so I stepped into the conversation and said, "I wouldn't do that – she was the first female in the Canadian Forces to earn her wings and she is very proud of them". And then I stepped away!

Major-General Tammy L. HARRIS, CD
Deputy Commander of the Royal Canadian Air Force

Tammy Harris graduated from Acadia University in 1987 and joined the Canadian Forces as an air traffic controller. She finished her air traffic control course in 1989, and was posted to Lahr, Germany, where she was appointed Tower Chief Controller.

In 1993, Harris was posted to Sault Ste Marie, Ont., where she became detachment commander and then deputy commanding officer of Northern Ontario Recruiting. In 1996, she was posted to 12 Wing Shearwater as the Chief Controller of the tower. During that time, she was involved in the aftermath of the Swiss Air 111 disaster.

She was promoted to Major in 2000 and posted to 15 Wing Moose Jaw for the commencement of the NATO Flying Training in Canada (NFTC) program. There, she became Wing Air Traffic Controller Officer then later, Wing Operations Officer.

In 2003, she became Commandant of the Air Command Academy at 16 Wing Borden.

The next year, she attended the Canadian Forces Staff Course in Toronto. In 2007, she was appointed the Commander of 9 Wing Gander.

In June 2009, she was deployed in Afghanistan, where she was a chief planner for NATO on the Kandahar Airfield and Base.

Then Colonel Tammy Harris took command of Canadian Forces Base Borden on 06 July 2012. She assumed responsibility for Canada's largest training base, a sprawling enterprise that employs 3,250 military members and 1,500 civilians and trains 15,000 military personnel per year. Colonel Harris was a 45-year-old grandmother at the time of assuming this command, the first female to command a major Canadian Forces Base.

A year later, she was promoted to Brigadier-General and seconded to the Privy Council Office (PCO). In 2016, she was promoted Acting While So Employed to the rank of Major-General was the Chief of Staff to the Chief of Defence Staff, in Ottawa (a position she had taken up in 2015).

In January 2017 she became the Deputy Commander of the Royal Canadian Air Force. She retired from the RCAF in the summer of 2017. She is married to Brig.-Gen Shane Brennan and has three stepchildren, ages 17, 20 and 22.

Major-General Marie Juliette Lise MATHIEU, CMM, CD
Commander Canadian Forces Medical Group
and Director General Health Services

Lise Mathieu joined the military after a newspaper advertisement caught her eye as a Grade 12 student. The Armed Forces were offering university tuition in exchange for four years of service after graduation. She joined the Air Force in 1973 and in 1978 graduated with a bachelor of business administration from the Université du Québec à Montréal and began her meteoric rise through the ranks.

Throughout her career, Major-General Mathieu held various command, staff officer and health care management positions in Canada and abroad. She was the Deputy Commanding Officer of 5e Ambulance de campagne du Canada. During the Oka crisis, she was the Liaison Officer between military and civilian health authorities.

Along the way she earned a master's degree in Health Administration from the Université de Montréal at the end of the 1980s.

In 1990 she coordinated the deployment of 1 Canadian Field Hospital to Saudi Arabia and was the Operations Officer of 1 Canadian Field Hospital during the Gulf war. She served in the Directorate of Personnel Policy Conditions of Service, where she became the advocate for gender integration in the Canadian Forces. She followed this assignment as the Executive Assistant to the Assistant Deputy Minister (Personnel). In 1998 she was the Executive Assistant to the Chief of the Defence Staff (General Joseph Maurice Baril).

In January 2000, having completed two years as Executive Assistant to the Chief of the Defence Staff, she was promoted to Brigadier-General. She was assigned the leadership of the Canadian Forces Medical Group and Director General Health Services. She was the first non-physician to head the CFMS. With the war in Afghanistan underway, she spent the next five years orchestrating the transformation of the CFHS into a top-notch medical service after years of neglect by the military. She was promoted to Major-General in 2004 and continued in her current assignment from which she retired in April 2005.

Major-General Mathieu faced years of neglect of the CFHS when she took command and changes had to be made. At the start of the war in Afghanistan, the morale of the medical officers and other members of the health care team were at an all-time low. Years of neglect, poor recruiting, poor salaries and commanders who did not value their services left the CFHS ill prepared for what Afghanistan would mean to the CFHS. However, having lived through the late 90's, what I saw when I returned in 2006 was an outstanding medical service including an outstanding group of people in the reserves.

Lise was made an Officer of the Order of Military Merit (OMM) as per the Canada Gazette of 01 July 2000 in the rank of Colonel and was the third woman made a Commander of the Order of Military Merit (CMM) as per the Canada Gazette of 25 March 2006 in the rank of Major-General. She earned the certification of Certified Health Executive (CHE™).

Col Speiser-Blanchet joined the Tactical Helicopter community on the Griffon Helicopter with 430e Escadron Tactique d'hélicoptères (ETAH) at CFB Valcartier, QC where she was the first female pilot.

On 01 July 2023, she was promoted to Major-General and became the Deputy Commander of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Her impressive career has not stopped her from building a wonderful family. Her husband, Major (ret'd) Janin Blanchet also served as a Griffon pilot and the two of them have three children Emma (19), Zachary (17), and Samuel (14)². Building a family in a demanding career that takes you across the country and on operational missions abroad takes a strong team at home.

Brigadier-General Hilary JAEGER, OMM, MSM, CD, QHP
Surgeon General 2004 - 2010

Born in England in 1959 BGen Jaeger began her career in the Militia, joining the West Nova Scotia Regiment (West NSR) in 1976 at the age of 17. She was offered her commission as a Logistics Officer within the West Novies while she was attending Acadia University in Wolfville, NS. Even with her commitments to the Militia she was able to achieve the academic focus required to graduate as the Mounce Medal recipient – awarded to the top graduate in the Engineering Program, as well as receiving a Bachelor of Mathematics.

Following her graduation from Acadia, BGen Jaeger went south to study aerospace engineering at Iowa State University and, rather than leave the militia, commenced training with the Pershing Rifles – a military/fraternal organization that boasts several American general officers amongst its membership including former Chairmen of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Generals (Retired) Colin Powell and Hugh Shelton. Even as a foreign student, BGen Jaeger managed to distinguish herself further by garnering a U.S. Presidential Citation.

Upon returning to Canada BGen Jaeger went in an entirely different direction and enrolled in the University of Toronto Medical School and graduated in 1986 as a MD and as an officer in the Regular Force.

Since graduating from medical school 27 years ago BGen Jaeger has set a blistering pace serving in 1, 2 and 4 Field Ambulance as well as 1 and 4 Service Battalion in Canada and Europe. Jaeger served as the Senior Medical Officer and Officer Commanding the National Support Element (NSE) in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina during the initial deployment of the United Nations mission in the former Yugoslavia in 1992 deploying with Major-General Lewis Mackenzie to Sarajevo. Two years later, she returned to Bosnia in command of the Forward Surgical Team. While Commanding Officer of 2 Field Ambulance, she had the privilege of leading the unit in support of the 1997 Manitoba flood and the 1998 ice storm

In Canada, having completed all levels of the Canadian professional military education, she was both the first woman and the only medical officer posted to teach at the Canadian Land Forces Command and Staff College, known as “Foxhole U”, in Kingston, Ontario.

With her promotion to Colonel in 2000 she was given the lead in national planning and coordination for medical operations – a job that took on greater significance following the attacks of September 11, 2001. She was the medical advisor to the then Chief of the Land Staff and later, in 2004, was promoted to Brigadier-General and appointed Surgeon General of the Canadian Forces – a job she held for almost 7 years. In 2007 she took over additional duties as Commander of the Canadian Forces Health Services Group and Director General Health Services.

After finishing the Surgeon General’s job, she deployed to Kabul, Afghanistan in October 2009 to be the NATO medical advisor to the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) where she was awarded the U.S. Meritorious Service Medal (MSM).

Following her return from Kabul BGen Jaeger was seconded to Veteran’s Affairs Canada (VAC) where she has been working tirelessly to assess the needs of whole new generation of veterans and bringing her vast experience to bear on helping transform programs. She is often quoted or interviewed about veteran’s programs and CF medical training and is a ubiquitous presence amongst the lists of Canadian women of influence and signal achievement. She retired in June 2013 from the Canadian Forces and Veterans Affairs Canada.

One of BGen Jaeger's unique accomplishment is one that might be best suited to Trivial Pursuit. BGen Jaeger was the first serving General Officer in the Canadian Forces to be married to another serving General Officer: Brigadier General Christopher C. Thurrott, OMM, MSM, CD – himself another West Novie alumnus and at the time of BGen Jaeger's retirement, the Commander of Land Force Atlantic Area. They both hold the OMM, MSM, and both received the Queen's Diamond Jubilee Medal in February 2013.

With BGen Jaeger's retirement the CF will be losing an officer of unique and global experiences, vast and varied technical abilities and a truly interesting life story that demonstrates the vast opportunities available to those who choose a career in the CF. From being a teenage Private in a Reserve infantry unit to an Army doctor to Surgeon General of the Canadian Forces, BGen Jaeger's long and illustrious career truly has set the benchmark for professional achievement.

Her obsession outside of work is golf and she also enjoys travel, cooking, gardening, reading, and the occasional Scotch.³

Brigadier-General Josée ROBIDOUX, OMM, CD
Deputy Commander 2nd Canadian Division

She was born in a small village called Omerville, PQ, just outside of Sherbrooke. She started in Air Cadets and then joined the Reserves with 714 Communication Squadron. Her first mentor was Louise Bisson (later Commodore) from 714 Squadron in Sherbrooke.

Brigadier-General Robidoux has spent 30 exceptional years in the Communication Reserve and the Canadian Army Reserve, including a deployment to Afghanistan in 2011/2012 where she served as a senior advisor to the Afghan National Army. During her deployment, her role was to act as Senior Advisor to an Afghan General. There was a lot of negotiation before one of the Afghan generals reluctantly accepted her because in that culture women are not the equal of men. He didn't have a problem with her being there with him, personally. The issue was, "What are people going to think? People are not going to think I am not an important Afghan general if my senior advisor is a female Canadian." But he got over that although it took about two or three months before she was accepted and that she was actually helping him be more efficient in his organization and in the eyes of the Chief of the General Staff of the Afghan Army. After that, she felt that he really adopted her and was very protective of her and very respectful and he would actually listen to the advice that she was giving him.

One of her roles was to help ensure the provisions were in place for women to be accepted into the Afghan Army. Culturally it was not as simple as in Canada where 18 per cent of the military are women - 14 per cent in the Army. In Afghanistan, in any Muslim country, when you have women in an organization, they have to have their own washroom. But they also have to have a separate place to eat and to pray and thus there is a lot of infrastructure that was needed to be built in order to have those women join an organization. She described one Afghan female officer, a Lieutenant Colonel, who was quite amazing. She was not afraid of anybody. She would walk into my Afghan general's office as if she owned it. He was so impressed by her that whenever she walked in, he stopped what he was doing, listened to her and she was really the one person who was devoted to getting more women into the Afghan army. Then Colonel Robidoux worked very closely with her and they did make some headway. When Colonel Robidoux left, the Afghan army was at four per cent women, which is not bad, especially since it was less than one percent in the past.

In June of 2015, Colonel Robidoux became the first woman commander of 35 Canadian Brigade Group and the first woman brigade commander in the province of Quebec. 35 CBG is headquartered in Québec City and is made up of more than 2,200 Reservists and 60 Regular Force members who make up 12 units stationed in Shawinigan, Sherbrooke, Trois-Rivières, Quebec City, Chicoutimi, Lévis, the Beauce and the lower St. Lawrence. She was also studying for her Master's in Public Administration at the time.

She lives near Ottawa with her husband of 20 years, Major Shaun Funk, a staff officer at Army Headquarters in Ottawa and the Deputy Commanding Officer of The Royal Canadian Hussars (Montreal). On 26 November 2015, Colonel Josée Robidoux was named one of Canada's top 100 most powerful women of the year by the Women's Executive Network (WXN).

Brigadier-General Josée Robidoux handed over command of 35 Brigade Group (35 CBG) to Colonel Richard Garon at a ceremony at the Saint-Malo Armory in Quebec City on Saturday, 10 June 2017, presided by Brigadier-General Hercule Gosselin, Commanding Officer The 2nd Division of Canada and Joint Task Force (East).

She was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General on 08 June 2017 and appointed the Deputy Commander of the 2nd Canadian Division (and Joint Task Force East) on 10 June 2017, where she will be particularly involved with the Reserves. She was concurrently appointed Director-General Reserves and Employer Support on 16 October 2017.

Brigadier-General Robidoux is a graduate of the Land Force Command and Staff College and has completed the Joint Command and Staff Course and the National Security Program at the Canadian Forces College in Toronto.

She was appointed as an Officer of the Order of Military Merit (OMM) as per the Canada Gazette of 02 June 2018.

Brigadier-General Robidoux retired from the Canadian Armed Forces in October 2019 and is now the Director of Integration of Gender Perspective and the Chief of Defense Staff Gender Advisor.

She was appointed as the Colonel Commandant of Canadian Military Communications and Electronics Network (CMCEN) in 2023.

Brigadier-General Patricia Maude SAMSON, OMM, CD

BGen Samson was the Canadian Forces Provost Marshal from 01 July 1997 until July 2001. From July 2001 to July 2002, she was the Director General Intelligence (J2) for the Canadian Forces. She retired in July 2002. after 24 years of distinguished service.

Brigadier-General Tattersall has served overseas with the United Nations Transitional Authority Cambodia and the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force Golan Heights (at Camp Faouar, Syria).

She described her tour in Afghanistan as follows: "I started the planning in September 2009, was nominated as commanding officer in 2010, so I did all the planning at the Ottawa level, and then got to repeat all the planning at the unit level to actually get ready to deploy soldiers in mid-April 2011. For me the tour was over like a snap of the fingers but for the soldiers, they'll tell you it was like Groundhog Day every single day in Afghanistan because they did the same tasks over and over." She had a team of 1,600 under her command who not only counted every item "once, twice, thrice", but sorted and checked all items to ensure their condition was such that they could be re-used, and therefore worth returning to Canada. Although they're not conventional measurements by any means, her staff calculated they had 132 football fields of equipment to ship back, and that they applied 51km of barcodes to the returning items. They repatriated 245 aircraft loads by CC-177 (C-17 Globemaster IIIs), 62 aircraft loads by CC-130Js (Hercules) and 184 aircraft loads by ANTONOVs sent through both Cyprus and Kuwait. The Forces also shipped 2,700 sea containers, some of which became part of a national news story, as they were found to have been pilfered and returned to Canada carrying rocks and sand. Rear-Admiral, The Honourable Rebecca PATTERSON, PC, OMM, MSM, CD
Commander - Royal Canadian Health Care Services
Chief of Staff - Chief of Staff, Chief Professional Conduct and Culture

Royal Canadian Health Care Services Rear-Admiral Rebecca Patterson has always loved the sea. The daughter of a Canadian submariner and a British Royal Navy nurse, she joined the Navy League at age 12. She was a cadet throughout her teenage years until going overseas as a Rotary exchange student at age 17. Born in 1965, she also loved the popular television series, *M*A*S*H*, a comedy about an American medical unit in the Korean war. So, when it came time to do something with her life, she didn't see any other path but the family tradition.

She joined the Canadian Armed Forces as a navy nurse and became part of the Royal Canadian Medical Service. In 1991, she was posted to Saudi Arabia as a member of the 1 Canadian Field Hospital during the Gulf War. Shortly after, she was sent to Somalia with the airborne regiment.

"Over six months, I was exposed to what I would say was the true military. I was the only critical care nurse in a very small medical team. I could never have imagined the conditions we found ourselves in. It was harsh. I mean, you didn't shower for six weeks and you had soldiers suffering from things like diarrhea and vomiting because it wasn't easy to wash your hands." She was also chosen to testify at the Somalia Inquiry.

"I came out as a leader who certainly understood how to protect my patients," says Patterson. "How to protect my subordinates, how to get the very best from them from a chain of command who may not have had that as their first priority at the time and how to speak for myself."

Patterson rose through the ranks. In 2000, she was appointed commandant of the Canadian Forces Medical Services School in Borden and then, in 2003, assumed the position of commanding officer of the Canadian Forces Health Services Centre for the Atlantic. She was the first non-physician naval officer to serve in Halifax. Two years ago, she was promoted to captain, one rank below admiral, and served as medical team lead and command advisor to the Afghan National Army as part of the Canadian contribution to the NATO medical training mission in Afghanistan.

"I have been fortunate to have had a variety of operational experiences, none of them under the blue beret by the way," she says. "I planned the medical mission and then executed it on the ground. Our ultimate goal was leaving our Afghan military colleagues with a sustainable medical education and training system, so they are left with something they are proud of."

She then became the Commander of 1 Health Services Group (Western Canada Military Health Services). As Commander, she was responsible for the delivery of all military medical care of the army, navy and air force bases and wings between Thunder Bay, Ont. and Esquimalt, B.C. as well as the Arctic. They include about 1,500 medical staff and civilians, the public service and even third-party medical contractors. "One of the hardest things about my jobs is constant change. That is my job," says Patterson in the face of cutbacks. "Because the Canadian Armed Forces has its own healthcare system, the challenge for me is how we continue to provide quality health care to our stakeholders and get our uniformed medical people ready to deploy wherever they may go with the right skills and the right ability, while at the same time reducing and creating efficiencies. "If I keep cutting your budget and cutting your budget and asking for returns, it's very hard to motivate people to want to stay in an organization. So, for recruitment and retention, I look at how I can make that vision of desire to serve as a motivating factor for people to remain in the organization.”

In June 2018, she was promoted to Commodore (while so serving) and appointed the Director General of Response on Sexual Misconduct. She was promoted to the substantive rank of Commodore on 30 June 2019.

She was promoted to Rear-Admiral on 21 July 2020 and appointed to Command the Royal Canadian Health Care Services.

In July 2021, she was appointed to a new position as Chief of Staff to the Chief Professional Conduct & Culture.

She retired in early January 2023 to take up her appointment to the Canadian Senate. She is now Senator Rebecca Patterson.

As one of the most senior women in Canada’s military and one of the few raising a family, Patterson was asked by National Defence to be a local champion for women. Her husband is based in Cold Lake, so during the week, she is essentially a single parent to the couple’s two children, both under age 15. She spends a lot her time trying to balance the needs of her family with the needs of the military. “About 15 per cent of our ranks are female, and most of what we do is very tough stuff, so it’s not a draw for everybody no matter what your gender is,” says Patterson, one of the few military women also raising a family. “The challenge is balancing the military needs of the ‘we’ with what you need as an ‘I.’ So, as a mentor, especially to women, I try to help them work through the challenges that come with trying to have a family and a career.”

Her most prized possession is a tie pin her father made from spoons when he was working on submarines. It’s her good luck charm and, since he passed away in 2005, she has worn it every single day. What it symbolizes for her is not only her relationship with her father, but also her sense of duty in service. “The thing that hasn’t changed for me is why I joined and it is service to Canada. If Canadians are going to terrible places, they deserve the best care possible, and I can give them that. That’s what drives me. It helps me to understand why I spend 13 months away from my children. It gives me speaking points for them to talk to them about service and duty. I know it sounds really corny, but that’s what my personal vision is and I shape everything else around that in my life.”

Commodore Margaret Frances KAVANAGH, OMM, CD
Chief of Canadian Forces Medical Services

Margaret's initial attempts to join the Canadian Forces were thwarted because she was a physical education major at university and she was not allowed to become a physical education officer as this occupation was open only to men in the early 1970s. She did get into the forces under the Medical Officers' Training Program while a medical student at the University of Western Ontario.

Commodore Margaret Kavanagh started her military service in 1979 as a general duty officer. She was not allowed to serve in an army field unit, fly aircraft or go to sea so this was not going to be a long military career. By chance, she sat beside a senior naval officer at a mess dinner, who suggested she put on a naval uniform and serve as a medical officer on HMCS Cormorant, the navy's diving ship. She became the first woman to serve at sea aboard a ship. She already had her Ship's Diving Medical Officer training but she pursued her Ship's Diver qualification after leaving the ship. She thus became one of only a handful of women qualified as Ship's Diver.

Her career covered seven different geographical locations in Canada from Calgary, Alberta to Halifax, Nova Scotia plus Lahr, Germany. She served as the Senior Medical Advisor (J1 Med) at the Canadian Forces Headquarters in Bahrain during the 1990 Persian Gulf Conflict. Her duties included clinical general practice, operational medicine in the land, sea and air environments, human physiological research following the completion of her master's degree and Medical administration. She was the Senior physician in clinic/hospital at Borden, Halifax and Lahr and a staff officer in several headquarters (Trenton, Bahrain and Ottawa) and has command experience as the Commanding Officer of 1 Field Ambulance and 1 Canadian Field Hospital in Calgary in 1994. Since 1998, she held four different senior staff officer appointments and was the Deputy Commander for the Canadian Forces Health Services Group. In April 2005, she was promoted to Commodore (first Regular Force Commodore) and became the Director-General / Commander of the Canadian Forces Health Services Group. She retired in July 2007.

She is a graduate of the NATO Defence College and a Certified Health Executive (CHE). She is an avid (semi-skilled golfer) and partakes in a wide variety of sporting activities. She was appointed Officer of the Order of Military Merit (OMM) as per the Canada Gazette of 25 June 2005 in the rank of navy Captain. ⁷

Commodore Marta Mulkins, CD
Commander Naval Reserve Divisions (COND)

Commodore Mulkins was born on 24 April 1967 in Brockville, Ontario. She started as a Naval Reservist at 18 when she took a summer job as a mechanic in 1995. While on land she took a diploma in Pure and Applied Sciences from John Abbott College followed by landscape architecture degrees from Carleton and the University of Toronto. Mulkins is first and foremost a landscape architect. It's a vocation she learned as a student at The University of Carleton's School of Industrial Design before moving on to a job as an architect in the Urban Design Department of Public Works and Government Services of Canada. Mulkins took an 18-month leave from the government to carry out duties as a Lieutenant-Commander in the Canadian Naval Reserves to command HMCS Kingston in August 2004, the first female to command a Canadian warship.

Other notables in her work portfolio include head of Strategic Communications at National Defence Headquarters in Ottawa and a six-month deployment to Afghanistan in 2006 as a member of the strategic advisory team on Operation Argus.

In command of HMCS Carleton since 2013, Capt(N) Mulkins was promoted to the rank of Navy Captain and appointed Central Regional Captain. Not only has the unit lost a commanding officer of such a rank, the first time in 25 years, but has also lost the honour of being led by the first woman to have ever commanded a warship, namely the HMCS KINGSTON, in 2003. Capt(N) Mulkins was to have taken command of the CARLETON in 2011, but she was admitted to the Naval War College in Rhode Island at that same time.

In June 2015, 48 years old Mulkins was promoted to Commodore and become the Commander of Naval Reserve Divisions. She relinquished this appointment in June 2018 and "transitioned to Class 'A' Service". She fully retired in 2022.

Commodore Christine NEWBURN-COOK, CD
Consultant and Senior Advisor (Naval Reserve)

Dr. Newburn-Cook received her MScN in 1979 from the University of British Columbia and her PhD in 1996 from the University of British Columbia in Interdisciplinary Studies: Epidemiology, Research Design and Measurement, Biostatistics. In 1999, she completed her Postdoctoral Fellowship at the University of Alberta in the Perinatal Research Centre under the supervision of Dr. David Olson. She joined the Faculty of Nursing as an Assistant Professor in 1996 and progressed through the ranks to Professor. In 2006, she assumed the role of Associate Dean (Research), a position that she held until her death.

Commodore Newburn-Cook joined the Naval Reserve in 1974. She served the last ten years as Consultant and Senior Advisor (Naval Reserve) and for 17 years as a Member of the Naval Reserve Council. Christine served as Officer-in-Charge of the HMCS STAR, Engineering & Boatswain Division from 1980 to 1987. After moving to Vancouver to attend UBC, she served as Commanding Officer of the HMCS Discovery from 1993 to 1996. During this period, in 1994, she was promoted to Captain (Navy). She received the Canada 125 medal and the EIIR Golden Jubilee Medal as well as the Canadian Forces Decoration with two Clasps. She and Brian Cook, a former Commanding Officer of HMCS Discovery, were married.

Christine passed away suddenly on 15 August 2011. On 14 April 2015, Rear-Admiral Jennifer Bennett, Commander Reserves and Cadets, presented her husband, Commander Brian Cook, CD with her Flag Officer Certificate and her Commodore shoulder boards. While most people believe that the promotion was posthumous, the date of her promotion on her Flag Officer scroll is actually 14 August 2011, one day before she died. The background to this is a long-standing grievance that Christine had regarding the actions of a senior officer that blocked her promotion to Commodore. After working the way through the system, it was decided that she should have been promoted to Commodore and this promotion was approved. However, her sudden death precluded doing this while she was alive. She was thus promoted effective when she was still alive.

Commodore Christine Newburn-Cook died on 15 August 2011 in Edmonton where she was a Professor in the School of Nursing and Associate Dean (Research) at the University of Alberta.

I had the privilege of serving with both Christine and Brian when they commanded HMCS Discovery. (John Blatherwick)

Colonel Nora NAAMAN, CD
To be Project Leader Military Personnel Management Capability Transformation

In a News Release from Ottawa on 25 March 2011, Project number NR-11.036, The Honourable Peter MacKay, Minister of National Defence, “Is pleased to announce additional senior Canadian Forces (CF) promotions and appointments for 2011: Col. Nora Naaman will be promoted to Brigadier-General and appointed Project Leader Military Personnel Management Capability Transformation at NDHQ, in Ottawa.”

However, in a similar announcement in June 2011, Colonel K.R. Cotton was announced as being promoted to Brigadier-General and appointed Project Leader Military Personnel Management Capability Transformation at NDHQ, in Ottawa, which he did. To follow this train of thought, in a similar announcement in December 2013, Colonel J.S. Sirois was promoted Brigadier-General and appointed Project Leader – Military Personnel Management Capability Transformation Project, at NDHQ, in Ottawa, replacing Brigadier-General K.R. Cotton.

Colonel Nora Naaman never took up her position and was not promoted to Brigadier-General. My sources tell me that she did not want to move to Ottawa and thus took a job in industry rather than be promoted.

In 2001 she was on the NATO Staff in Brussels as a PLog (Logistics Officer).
